

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

WASHINGTON, D.C., Aug. 25, 2008 – Today, Liz Hill announced that she is now representing Eagle Thunder Entertainment. The company is co-owned by Robby Romero, an internationally renowned musician and United Nations Ambassador for the Environment, and Stacey Thunder, co-host of the popular PBS television series, “Native Report.” The company is based in Taos, N.M.

“I am thrilled to be handling Robby’s, Stacey’s and their company’s public relations; they are an extraordinarily talented couple who are doing incredible work in the entertainment industry – and also throughout Indian Country,” said Hill.

This month, Romero was honored for his part in making possible the construction of Sacred Hoop School, the first private Lakota language immersion school in the northern Plains. The school is located in Oglala, S.D. Romero raised awareness for the school during a 15-city European tour which raised more than 1 million euros. He is currently promoting his latest EP/CD release, “Painting the World.” Thunder is currently in production for the fourth season of “Native Report.” The new season will begin airing nationally in January.

“Robby and Stacey have a number of impressive projects lined up well into the future; and it will be a pleasure for me to ‘get the word’ out widely about all of their successes, which are so well deserved,” said Hill. “Expect to hear a lot more about both of them.”

Eagle Thunder Entertainment is an independent indigenous entertainment company with four divisions: film production; a music label; music publishing; and artist management. The company has reached millions of listeners and viewers through critically acclaimed and award-winning music releases, music videos, “rockumentary” films, and public service announcements that have premiered at prestigious events, including: the American Indian Film Festival; Sundance Film Festival; and the United Nations; and have aired on leading television and cable networks such as CNN, MTV, VH1, Sundance Channel and SABC Africa. For more information about Eagle Thunder Entertainment, visit www.eaglethunder.com.

###